

The Story Behind Phil Stamp Covers

J. Edward Oliver (1942-2007)

Ten years ago, just before the London Stamp Exhibition 2000 at Earls Court, Steve Oliver came up with the idea of having a cartoon character to accompany the new Royal Mail Smilers® sheets that were to be issued at the show.

Jack Edward Oliver, Steve’s cousin, originally designed and drew the illustrations that appeared on the covers. The first cover produced was purely for Steve’s collection and was never made available to other collectors. This featured stamps from the first smilers sheets, and the associated labels carried a photograph of Steve Oliver – see illustration. I am grateful to Steve Oliver for permission to reproduce the illustration of this first Phil Stamp cover.

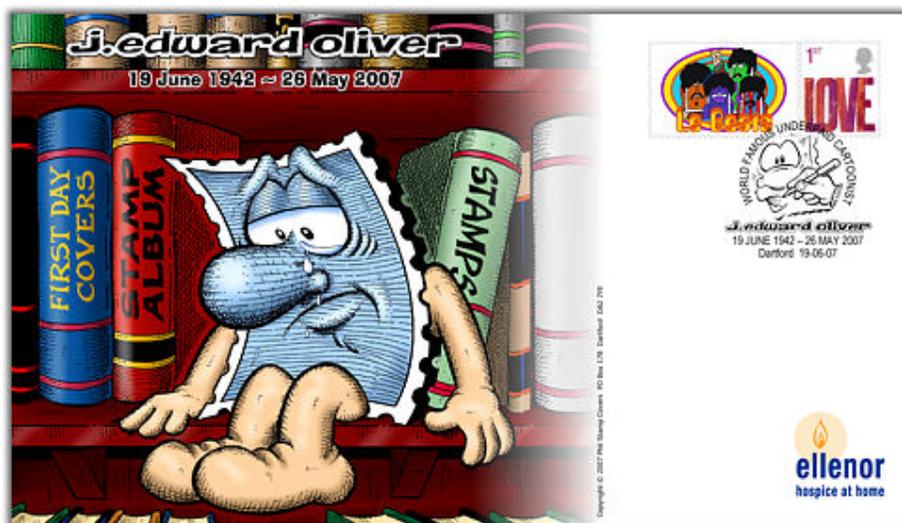

Hunt Emerson

Jack Oliver died on 26 May 2007, after a brave battle with cancer. Initially Richard Duszczak took up the illustrator’s pen, followed by Steve Oliver and more recently since September 2008 Hunt Emerson has become the resident cartoonist and has been doing a fantastic job ever since.

The First Cover

To commemorate Jack's incredible talents as an artist, and friend to many people, Phil Stamp Covers produced two covers in 2007 featuring Jack’s characters and work. The first features an illustration intended to be the first frame of a strip of drawings telling the story of Phil Stamp. Unfortunately the rest of the strip was never completed, so it was used as a tribute to JEO's amazing genius. The second cover features a montage of some of JEO's characters, some famous, some not so famous. Both covers featured personalised smilers label/stamp from a limited number of sheets commissioned by Steve Oliver which are illustrated below.
